Seven earn Lutheran Services Carolinas Loyal Service Award

Lutheran Services Carolinas has given its Loyal Service Award to seven employees: Rena Creech, Thomas McGlynn, Jonathan Forrester, Jerome McCallum, Tini Chapman, Melanie Cook, and Amy Murphy. Nominated by their peers and supervisors, these employees have been recognized for their exceptional dedication to their jobs and the LSC mission.

Rena Creech is a foster care supervisor for LSC's South Carolina foster care program. Creech has been a foster parent herself, and her foster children who are now adults consider her family. Creech's own experience as a parent gives her an invaluable perspective on her job. Staff members and clients alike are drawn to her compassion, sincerity, and down-to-earth attitude.

Thomas McGlynn is a peer support specialist for LSC's ACTT program in Chapel Hill. Overcoming many challenges in his own life has made McGlynn especially attuned to the struggles of others and has added to his effectiveness as a counselor. "At 75 years old, Tom has continued to work on improving in his work and inspires me with his level of strength, perseverance, and energy to do the work he does," said Amanda Howard, McGlynn's supervisor.

Life Enrichment Coordinator Jonathan Forrester has worked at Trinity View in Arden for nine years, starting in dining services. Known as a compassionate and caring employee, Forrester quietly leads by example. Working diligently in the background and volunteering to do whatever is needed, Forrester is devoted to making sure residents are happy and engaged, and he extends his efforts to help other staff members as well. He's recently developed a senior walking club and a flourishing dance club.

I write to you from the national Lutheran assembly in New Orleans where I am serving as one of about 900 delegates. This has been a week of long legislative sessions and sitting, which I don't do well. But it has been great, and exciting! The church has taken important actions on race, serving migrant children, and more. We have had wonderful daily worship, were wowed by the report from Presiding Bishop Elizabeth Eaton, and were challenged by Nobel laureate and Liberian peace activist Leymah Gbowee.

What difference does this make to Lutheran Services Carolinas? We are the church together! LSC was birthed by the Lutheran church and is tied closely to the church. LSC and similar ministries around the country are expressions of the church. Since we are all in this together, it behooves us to spend time together and collaborate together. LSC receives ideas, initiatives, suggestions, and some funding from the church. The assembly is a place for fellowship with friends and a place to get to know state and national church leaders. There is no better place to be, literally and figuratively.

Jerome McCallum works in dining services at Trinity Oaks in Salisbury and is known by staff and residents as the "go-to guy" who brings joy, dedication, and a can-do spirit to his job. He sometimes picks up stranded employees during stormy weather so meals won't be interrupted. Known for spontaneously bursting into song, McCallum has learned the names of each resident during the 22 years he's been at Trinity Oaks.

Tini Chapman, a CNA who works in the memory care neighborhood at Trinity Ridge in Hickory, is known as a great team player willing to take on any assignment with a smile. Family members notice her devotion and request her because of the warmth and compassion she shows to all residents. As someone who believes in "paying it forward," Chapman often donates PTO hours to help co-workers and says being able to care for another human being is a joy.

Amy Murphy is a CNA at Trinity Living Center in Salisbury, which provides adult day services. With a seemingly innate understanding of the emotional toll dementia can take on individuals and their families, Murphy unfailingly shows compassion and respect, making participants feel special and loved. Participants tell her daily how much they love her and how grateful they are for her. On her own time, she continues to serve by giving free haircuts at several area nursing homes.

Melanie Cook has been a registered nurse at Trinity Ridge for 12 years. A consummate professional with excellent clinical and communication skills, Cook is a strong advocate for both residents and staff. Compassionate and approachable, she admits to having a soft spot for the odd duck or the underdog. Known for sharing homemade soup in the winter, Cook is always looking for ways to spread love to those around her.

Building Independence update

Lutheran Services Carolinas joined Habitat for Humanity of Wake County and The Serving Cup of Raleigh August 21 to dedicate the Building Independence project, three homes on Lake Wheeler Road in Raleigh that will accommodate nine adults with disabilities. See the next edition of Voices for more on this exciting project.

Refugee program news

LSC's Refugee and Immigrant Services program had a busy summer.

In June, Ted Goins and Bedrija Jazic spoke at the 2016 South Carolina Synod Assembly in Columbia. Jazic's presentation about the refugee crisis was well received, as was the announcement of LSC's exciting new partnership with Lutheran Theological Southern Seminary. Under the leadership of Dr. Jann Boyd, the seminary is now offering temporary housing to refugee families waiting for permanent homes.

As one of the assembly's discipleship experience offerings, Jazic led a session that illustrated the process that refugees go through as they struggle to make their way in the United States. In another session, LSC's Kat Heavner presented information at a "pack and paint" party that educated delegates about human/sex trafficking and rescue efforts. Some of the bags decorated and packed with items during the session were given to LSC to distribute to refugees as they arrive in the United States.

LSC also helped celebrate World Refugee Day in North and South Carolina. St. Andrew's Lutheran Church and LSC partnered with the refugee community in Columbia to hold a multi-cultural event and a yard sale on June 25. The event raised more than a thousand dollars to fund renovations to Welcome House, a home on the grounds of St. Andrew's that provides transitional housing to newly arriving refugees from all over the world. In addition to the support of dozens of St. Andrew's volunteers, many families participated as artisans or food vendors. Entertainment was provided by a choir of refugees from the Karen people of Burma. LSC also participated in a World Refugee Day celebration in Raleigh.

Bedrija Jazic led a discipleship experience at the South Carolina Synod Assembly that helped people understand the refugee experience.

Columbia-area refugees and others came to St. Andrew's to help celebrate World Refugee Day.

A fashion show was a highlight of a World Refugee Day celebration in Raleigh June 18. LSC Refugee Services staff and clients participated in the festivities.

NASCAR legends Ned and Dale Jarrett recently visited with LSC President Ted Goins at Ned's home in Conover, N.C.

Dear LSC family and friends,

Lutheran roots are strong and deep in the Jarrett family. When I was 9 my father would let me drive the family car to church, which was Sardis Lutheran in Hickory. Years later, when Martha and I got married, we joined Beth Eden Lutheran in Newton, and that's where our children – Dale, Glenn, and Patti – grew up.

When we moved from Catawba County to South Carolina to further my racing career, we always found a Lutheran church to welcome us. When we came back to North Carolina, we were happy to return to Beth Eden. Being part of close-knit, nurturing Lutheran congregations, as well as the larger Lutheran family, has been a godsend to us over the years.

The Lutheran family extends beyond the church walls through social ministries like Lutheran Services Carolinas. We have been gratified to watch Lutheran Services grow over the years to be able to help so many people, from seniors to foster children to those with disabilities.

Trinity Village in Hickory is one LSC ministry that has touched us personally. Martha's mother, Lena Bowman, was among the very first residents at what was then Lutheran Home-Hickory. We didn't even think of sending her anywhere else. The wonderful, loving care she received there added greatly to the quality and, we are convinced, duration of her life.

Dale and I were especially happy to lend our support to a fundraising project at Trinity Village called the Dale Jarrett Brickyard back in 2001. We were also involved with a golf tournament in Hickory that helped to support an LSC counseling center.

We have been so impressed with the good work that Lutheran Services Carolinas has done over the years, not only for Lutherans but for the whole community. We have proudly supported those efforts.

Fellow Carolinians, won't you join us in supporting LSC?

Sincerely,

Ned Jarrett

"Laughter is timeless, imagination has no age, and dreams are forever." - Walt Disney

Trinity Grove, an LSC long-term care community in Wilmington, pulled out all the magical stops this spring with a Disney-themed Spirit Week.

Residents got to stroll down memory lane, remembering when they took their children or grandchildren to a Disney theme park. Other residents who had never had the opportunity to visit Disney enjoyed the chance to experience a bit of what they had missed.

"The idea that one is never too old to dream is our theme every day at Trinity Grove," said Amanda Powell, director of life enrichment.

Lutheran Services Carolinas collaborates with The Arc

Older caregivers of family members with intellectual and/or developmental disabilities are often isolated or disconnected from disability services. Too often, they have no realistic plan for a loved one's care when they are no longer able to provide it. To address this issue, Lutheran Services Carolinas is teaming up with The Arc of North Carolina as part of a national initiative to connect older caregivers to future planning resources.

This one-year project, a collaboration between Lutheran Services in America and The Arc's Center for Future Planning, is made possible through a grant to The Arc from The Retirement Research Foundation, which is dedicated to improving the lives of our nation's elders.

On June 15, eight LSC staff members participated in an Arc-led training session for human services professionals at Davidson County Community College. LSC's Melissa Sapp attended, and noted that future planning is essential for aging guardians of developmentally disabled adults. "This is not comfortable subject matter to introduce to families and guardians, but as providers and advocates for our clients, the discussions are necessary to ensure the client's continuous stability of care."

"We are excited to work with The Arc to recruit trainees and help raise awareness about the future planning needs of aging caregivers across our region," said Ted Goins, president of LSC.

Grove Medical is LSC's South Carolina Philanthropist of the Year

LSC's South Carolina Philanthropist of the year is Grove Medical, Inc., based in Greenville.

"We have enjoyed a partnership with LSC since 2009," says Rob Arnold, Grove's vice president of business development. "I truly believe it's our similar cultures and company atmospheres that make us such perfect partners. Together we focus on providing the best resident care that can be given."

As the distributor for most of LSC's medical supplies for its nursing homes, Grove Medical offers excellent customer service, with staff always going the extra mile and sometimes even saving the day by understanding that resident care is priority one for LSC.

Beyond the business relationship, Grove Medical has generously supported LSC's Keeping the Promise campaign as well as the Trinity Oaks golf tournament since 2009. And in 2015, Grove made a generous annual fund gift to LSC.

"Each year as a company we identify multiple causes that we vote on to support," Arnold said. "This past year, Grove voted to select LSC."

LSC's Elliott Williams shares a moment with Shannon Wasmer and David York of Grove Medical, which was honored with LSC's Philanthropist of the Year award for South Carolina.

LSC to provide disaster case management for SC flood victims

Lutheran Services Carolinas has received a grant of $238,892 from Lutheran Disaster Response to provide disaster case management in the South Carolina counties of Richland and Lexington, which sustained heavy damage from flooding caused by Hurricane Joaquin in October 2015. The grant will be used to provide two case managers for two years to serve an estimated 180 households with pending FEMA registrations. Services provided will include assistance in securing housing, connecting to benefits and other resources, and facilitating housing repairs.

LSC is currently involved in the Long Term Recovery Group (LTRG) for Richland and Lexington counties. Disaster case managers will coordinate with this group, as well as the Voluntary Organizations Active in Disaster (VOAD) case management task force, the Coordinated Assistance Network (CAN) system for case referrals, the South Carolina Synod, and Lutheran Disaster Response. Case managers will also work with an alliance formed of other faith-based agencies across the state, including the United Methodist Committee on Relief (UMCOR) and St. Vincent DePaul, to facilitate case management.

As the two-year period ends in the summer of 2018, LSC will continue to assess need and will seek charitable donations from individuals, businesses, places of worship, and foundations to extend case management services beyond the grant period if needed.

Collaboration helps LSC refugee client

Ahmed Ajbna is from the troubled country of Sudan.

Because of divisions between groups there, having an African mother and an Arab father placed Ahmed's family in a dangerous position. A deep thinker and lover of learning, Ahmed made his way to the university in the capital city of Khartoum. Unfortunately, the professors who dominated the university did not approve of Ahmed speaking out about oppression and injustice inflicted on the Sudanese people.

One thing led to another, and Ahmed knew he had to leave the country if he wanted to stay alive. He and his wife managed to cross three countries on foot in a journey that finally brought them as refugees to Raleigh, where they are clients of Lutheran Services Carolinas.

Ahmed's first job was delivering subs on his bike for Jimmy John's. He would ride his bike five miles to get to work and then continue riding his bike all over downtown Raleigh in the summer heat delivering lunches. Ahmed then picked up a second job working as a custodian at Crabtree Valley Mall.

The almost two-hour commute by bike and bus from his home to Crabtree Valley Mall began to wear on him. Ahmed applied for a position with DirecTV repairing and installing satellites, which is what he had done before coming to the U.S. The job would mean a huge pay raise and alleviate the constant financial stress Ahmed and his wife felt.

After lots of anxious waiting, Ahmed was offered the job but had no way of getting there every day. To solve this problem, LSC helped Ahmed apply to receive a highly discounted car through an LSC partner called Wheels4Hope. Wheels4Hope is a faith-based nonprofit dedicated to helping vulnerable families secure reliable vehicles.

With the help of Wheels4Hope, Ahmed was able to accept his dream job. It is not surprising that, with his sharp mind and infectious smile, Ahmed has already been promoted with DirecTV. He is also the proud owner of a 1998 Honda Civic.

Staying in touch with direct care challenges

Did you know that LSC President and CEO Ted Goins used to be a certified nursing assistant and still maintains his certification? In order to do that he must complete at least one nursing shift every two years, and he usually works a shift every year. Staying in touch with the challenges of direct care gives him a perspective on the company that many CEOs don't have. For his part, Goins says that he worked too hard to get the certification to let it lapse.

Artist creates new door for TLC

The TLC door before its makeover

What was once a door at Trinity Living Center is now a table with a vase of flowers.

Actually, that's not quite true: the door is still a door, but it's been cleverly disguised to look like a table with a vase of flowers in front of an ornate wall mirror. Why?

Caregivers for those with dementia know that doors can provide a challenge. At Trinity Living Center, participants in the adult day services program were often distracted by the door that serves as the entrance to the center, gathering there persistently despite staff efforts to redirect them.

Now, the door is an amazing work of art – and much less of a distraction. Charlotte artist Randall Kane came up with a design and painted the door in the “trompe l’oeuil” style with a three-dimensional scene that fools the eye.

The cost of the project was paid by a grant from employee donations through LSC’s “We Believe” fund.

Artist Randall Kane poses with the finished door, painted in the ‘trompe l’oeuil’ style.

Connecting in a crisis

LSC IT staff members Chris Rabeler and Johnathan Ford test LSC’s new satellite trailer, ‘Major Tom.’

Thanks to a grant from the North Carolina Synod’s Michael Peeler Fund and a grant from the South Carolina Synod’s Mission Endowment Fund, Lutheran Services Carolinas has acquired backup technology for use in the event that a disaster disrupts Internet and other communications.

A new self-contained communications trailer (the Toughsat T-100 – or commonly known around LSC as Major Tom) will be used in the event of an emergency to provide broadband Internet and Voice Over Internet Protocol phone service in any location so that resident care is not disrupted by lack of access to electronic medical records. Within five minutes of parking the T-100, LSC staff can create a high-speed satellite Internet connection and then automatically establish a half-mile radius wireless access point for any device, including computers and tablets.

This portable satellite connection will be available first to LSC senior and child and family programs. When not needed by an LSC facility, the communications trailer will be made available for deployment as a potentially life-saving mobile command center at the disposal of Lutheran Disaster Coalition of the Carolinas, an LSC-led disaster response collaboration serving both North and South Carolina.

Trinity Oaks is Changing Spaces!

Trinity Oaks in Salisbury is growing, thanks to the Changing Spaces campaign. The campaign is currently raising funds to support the building of 18 new assisted living rooms at the Trinity Oaks independent living community, which will bring the total number of assisted living beds at that location to 38 and have the added benefit of freeing up space for private rooms in the health and rehab building. The expansion will also provide improved community space, including a sunroom and screened porch for assisted living residents.

An anonymous donor has pledged a matching gift of $250,000 for the campaign. The donor will match, up to $250,000, new gifts received from July 31 to Dec. 31 of 2016 and payments made in fulfillment of new pledges received during that time.

Trinity Place unveils new therapy gym and entrance

Trinity Place, LSC's senior living community in Albemarle, showcased recent renovations there during a July open house and blessing.

The Stanly County Chamber of Commerce kicked off the event with a ribbon-cutting at the entrance to the new state-of-the-art therapy gym, which was followed by a blessing of the space by the Rev. Ray Sipe, Trinity Place chaplain. Residents and staff were all smiles as they toured guests through the gym and newly renovated common areas.

The 45-year-old structure also received a much needed facelift with the addition of a beautiful new porte cochere (covered front entrance) high enough to accommodate emergency vehicles and campus buses.

The additional space and features will enable Trinity Place to expand its rehabilitation program to include out-patient services.

The renovations were made possible through LSC's Keeping the Promise campaign.

Over 250 well-wishers, including past administrators Priscilla Vint and Russ Myers, attended the event.

Among the recent renovations to Trinity Oaks was the addition of a covered front entrance, which allows clearance for emergency vehicles.

Trinity Village hosts Camp Lutheridge

Camp Lutheridge teamed up again this summer with Trinity Village, a Lutheran Services Carolinas senior living community in Hickory, to offer Lutheroad Day Camp.

A big hit for the second year in a row, the camp was held June 20-24 on site at Trinity Village. Counselors from Camp Lutheridge, together with staff members and volunteers from Trinity Village, led 28 campers – 11 more than last year -- in music, arts and crafts, games, field trips, Bible study, and nature programs. Residents of Trinity Village joined campers in some activities, including a service project for the Hickory Soup Kitchen, making the week a unique opportunity for intergenerational connection.

Trinity Village resident Alice Hansen enjoys a petting zoo with Lutheridge campers.

‘Code Angel’

Rituals in long-term care communities comfort families, staff

Kaye Brown Hirst remembers the emotional impact of seeing the corridor “solid with people” on both sides as she escorted her mother’s body to the front entrance of Trinity Oaks, health and rehab in Salisbury.

That scenario testifies to just how much practices surrounding death have changed in many nursing homes. In the past, deceased residents would be wheeled quickly out the back, with doors to other resident rooms discreetly closed. A new resident would be moved into the vacated room as though nothing had happened.

The long-term care communities of Lutheran Services Carolinas prefer to take an approach that treats death as a natural life passage, to be acknowledged with compassion and respect – and marked by rituals.

“We don’t behave as though death is a shameful secret here,” says the Rev. Beth Woodard, chaplain of Trinity Glen in Winston-Salem. “Death is a part of everyone’s journey, and as Christians, we are not afraid of it.”

At Trinity Village in Hickory, when a resident nears the end of life, a prayer quilt ceremony is offered, says Sharon Benfield, life enrichment director. Staff and family gather around the resident’s bedside and a prayer shawl ceremony helps cover the resident with love and prayers, Benfield says.

Staff at LSC care communities are typically alerted to a resident’s death by a special announcement over the public address system, like “Code Angel” or “Guardian Angel.” Whatever the prompt, it’s a signal for staff to either gather at the resident’s room for a service of commendation or to line the hallways to show love and respect as the body is taken to the front of the building, where a service may also be held. It’s a simple but powerful practice that family members like Hirst remember with gratitude.

Often, depending on the family’s preference, an American flag, a handmade quilt, or a special “promise pall” is used to drape the body.

Several LSC facilities use a “bedside service of closure,” which staff members are empowered to perform if the chaplain is not available. Staff members who helped care for the resident gather at the bedside to pray, share reminiscences, and give thanks for the life of the resident.

The service can provide important healing for staff members, who often have tight bonds with the resident, says the Rev. Brenda Bynum, chaplain at Trinity Oaks.

It is perhaps during times of loss when long-term care communities feel the most like families.

“It was just beautiful, absolutely beautiful, knowing how much they cared,” Hirst said. “These people become your family.”

LSC offering private domestic adoption services

Exciting news: LSC is now offering private domestic adoption services. Lauren Perkins, LSC's new director of private adoptions, will be helping to connect expectant mothers with highly qualified individuals seeking to build their families through adoption. While most adoptions will likely be finalized within a 50-mile radius of Charlotte, arrangements for adoption outside of that area may be possible.

"As someone who was fortunate to be adopted as a baby, I'm excited about bringing this service back to LSC," Perkins says.

If you would like more information about the program, call Perkins at 704-412-1785 or email privateadoption@LSCCarolinas.net.

Rixman joins LSC development team

Lutheran Services Carolinas welcomes its new Director of Development, Heidi S. Rixman. Rixman comes to LSC with more than 15 years of fundraising experience. As director, Rixman will be charged with building and maintaining donor relationships as well as the coordination of major campaigns that will advance the mission of LSC.

"We are thrilled to have Heidi join the LSC team," said Chief Development Officer Betty Kuhn. "Her enthusiasm for LSC's mission is contagious."

Originally from Yardley, Pennsylvania, Rixman attended Delaware Valley University, graduating with a Bachelor of Arts in English and earning her Masters in Nonprofit Management from Pennsylvania's Eastern University.

"I feel honored to have the opportunity to join such a wonderful ministry and I look forward to being a part of LSC's continued growth throughout the Carolinas," Rixman says.

Rixman and her husband, Todd, live in Davidson and are the parents of Evan, 14, and Macy, 12. They attend Community in Christ Lutheran Church, Cornelius.

Save for the date for Incarnation's Oktoberfest

Holy Schnitzel! Oktoberfest is coming up, Oct. 14-16, at Incarnation Lutheran Church in Columbia. This festival of German heritage is free and open to the public and includes activities for the kids, live entertainment, authentic home-cooked German food, and plenty of German beer. If you stop by, look for LSC's table and get some goodies. Hours are 11 a.m.-10 p.m. Friday and Saturday and from noon to 6 p.m. Sunday. If you're interested in volunteering, contact Sarah Sawicki at Sarahsawicki@gmail.com. Proceeds from the event support LSC and other Columbia-area organizations.

NC and SC WELCA groups support LSC

The Women of the ELCA rock.

Once again, both North and South Carolina groups have demonstrated over-the-top support for the people served by Lutheran Services Carolinas.

Annually, the women of the North Carolina group contribute thousands of dollars in cash and in-kind gifts, and this year was no different. Final numbers totaled $1,046 in cash and $2,345 in in-kind contributions for N.C. programs. The ladies delivered everything from school supplies and toiletries to household goods and cleaning products to their annual gathering in Hickory where it was then loaded up for transport to the LSC Raleigh Office.

The South Carolina Women of the ELCA were also exceedingly generous this year. As part of a special 2016 "For the Sake of Children" campaign, the women collected more than 4,000 books to be given to children served by LSC! Hundreds of boxes and bags of books were carted and carried to Greenville, along with $6,383 in cash and $1,120 in gift card contributions.

Words cannot adequately express the depth of LSC's gratitude for the unfailing support of these outstanding women's organizations. You're awesome!

Among those who attended the South Carolina WELCA gathering were LSC's Heidi Rixman; Bob Coon and Brittany Whitley, both of Lutheran Homes of South Carolina; and LSC's Liz Whittington.
